THE DIFFERENCE

This publication is about the difference between a genuine smile and a fake smile. If you know where to look for, you'll see the differences and you'll recognize them.

Nowadays a lot of people fake their smiles on pictures, and there are some reasons for that. One of them is that they basically just don't like you, but they don't want to say that so they lie about it. A fake smile can also occur when people aren't feeling comfortable or appreciated in a particular surrounding. They will then again put on a fake smile to avoid any confrontation. It also happens in situations when people are forced to smile, like the carpet events, or photo shoots. If you look very closely at pictures of models and celebrities, you'll often notice that they are faking their smile.

A real smile is pure, it reflects our emotions and feelings. It will occur when people are sincerely happy, or when they have to laugh about something. The main reason is that they feel comfortable and appreciated enough to express that in a smile. A real smile is always honest.

But how can you recognize them? It's not that difficult if you know where to look for. It includes facial expressions, such as the mouth, eyes, and eyebrows.

1. When someone has a genuine smile, you'll see that in their eyes.

If someone is really smiling, their eyes will be slightly different if you compare it to a fake one. It looks like they are sparkling, that's because they reflect their emotions from within.

2. The eyebrows will change

When there's a real smile, you'll notice that their eyebrows are lower than normal. That's because the eye muscle named 'orbicularis oculi', is affected when someone is really smiling. So, if you see that their eyebrows are completely normal during a smile, they are probably faking it.

3. The 'eye wrinkles'

Maybe you've heard from the term 'laugh wrinkles' before, well, they exist. You can find them right in the corner of your eyes and they'll occur when someone is really smiling. That's because that person is using their lower and upper facial muscles. During a fake smile, people are only using their lower muscles, so their wrinkles will not occur as much as when someone is really smiling.

4. Your cheeks

If you're feeling really happy or excited, your cheeks will lift up. They'll be slightly higher than normal, and that's a big difference if you compare a real smile and a fake one. The cheeks are easily controlled, so that's why they won't lift up during a fake smile.

Only if someone knows about this fact, they can use it during a fake smile, and you'll then won't be able to see a fake one that easily anymore.

If you look at a fake smile, you'll see that their mouth will be straight-lipped, the bottom teeth are showing, and their eyes will be forced to stay open (during a real smile the eyes are more closed).

I've put some examples of famous models with their real and fake smile in my publication, so you can try to look for the differences.
